(一) Is a Crow Smarter Than a Seven-Year-Old?

When we think of intelligent animals, we usually think of dogs, cats, and apes. But did you know that a crow is one of the most intelligent animals in the world?

Crows have memories and they are able to imagine the future. This helps them solve problems like an ape. They even use tools sometimes. A crow can hold a tiny stick in its mouth and use it to get at tasty insects.

It is common to think that a crow in a tree is not paying any attention to you. You might be wrong, though. Crows can remember human faces. Some scientists believe that they can even tell other crows whether a human is friendly.

Some scientist have tested how intelligent crows are compared to humans. They found that crows were able to solve a puzzle just as well as a seven-year-old human. In another test, a crow solved an eight-stage puzzle within three minutes.

So if anyone ever calls you "bird brain," be sure to thank him or her for the compliment.

Whales are mammals, so in many ways, they are just like humans. The most important difference is that humans and whales live in different environments and whales have a special breathing system that lets them stay underwater for several minutes without breathing. Because of whales' underwater environment, they must be conscious breathers. That is, they have to decide when to breathe for themselves. They think about every breath they take and come up to the surface of the water to breathe through blowholes on top of their heads.

What is also special about whales is the way they sleep. While all mammals sleep, whales cannot become unconscious for long because they may drown. The only way they can sleep is by staying partially conscious. Scientists believed that only one half of the whale's brain sleeps at a time. In this way, they get enough rest they need though they are never completely asleep.

And where do whales sleep? Maybe they can sleep anywhere, but it makes sense that they would do it near the surface so that they can come up for air easily.
